Update from ASSA—christine.clarke@medway.gov.uk

ASSA will be following up any school attendances going back 6 months before the lock-down period, and will still consider prosecution even if the child has been removed for home schooling. (This does not include the time period where the government made the decision to close schools).

There is no follow up with students in years 12 and 13 as these year groups are not statutory.

September will see the beginning of following new cases where children are not attending school.
